

Cyber safety cards

1. Your mate is on the internet. They are thinking about signing up to a new social networking site where they can post pictures and talk to others. It asks for their personal information.

2. Your best friend has had an online 'pen-pal' called Dave for nearly a year. This friend has been a good source of support and somebody to share things with when times have been difficult. Dave has shared a recent picture of himself with her family and seems really nice. He is going to be visiting the area at the weekend and wants to meet your best friend in town.

3. Your little sister gets sent a text message on her mobile saying, 'Reply to this text to receive the latest ring tones on your phone.'

4. Your brother is a member of a 'virtual world' website. He meets someone who suggests that they go to a 'private room' on the website so they can exchange email addresses and chat in some more depth.

5. Your friend is looking for pictures for their school science project on the body. By accident, she finds some pictures and photographs that make her feel really uncomfortable and embarrassed – they are basically porn and involve younger children.

6. Your mate has received an email which says, 'This is you tomorrow,' with a picture below it which appears to be a dead person.

Photocopiable:

Developing Emotional Literacy with Teenagers, 2nd edition © Tina Rae, 2013 (SAGE)