It just happened. It's complicated because D came from England and couldn't get a work permit and couldn't get permanent residency so that I took over the breadwinner role and I became pregnant and he became very excited about that and he wanted to be with the baby and it didn't worry me because my job is very convenient and I enjoy doing it. We just stayed as we were. I could just get six months leave of absence not 12 because I hadn't been employed long enough full-time, so I went back to work when G was only four months of age. But I was able to come home at lunchtimes. So it was really financial and political reasons why we swapped roles.	Sudden change Work choices Wife became pregnant Father wanted involvement with child Wife happy working 6 months leave Breastfed at lunchtime Financial and political reasons
